

RENDER OF THE YEAR 2020 RESULTS RELEASED

Designers are storytellers.

They assume many roles, but common to them all is the task of telling the story of the spaces and worlds they imagine. Often, they must convey these thoughts with images. Through their images, they can shape and influence how others feel and understand their ideas.

Although designers continue to be equipped with better digital tools, making it easier to create images, there is still a great deal of craft in visualization. Designers must discern the ways people interpret their images. They must work with the feelings that emerge from an image. They must understand how to speak to their audience without words.

The Render of the Year award sought out compelling images of architecture, interiors, cities, and worlds that could be. The results are divided into five categories: Overall Awards, Young Designer Awards, Undergraduate Awards, Interior Awards, and Exterior Awards. Collectively they represent a wide range of visual content, styles, and scales that tell the stories of their designs.

The next Render of the Year competition will release in Summer 2021
